A PEEP AT ALGIERS.

Oriental Magnificence Displayed in

Arabian Costumes ABLAZE WITH THE RAREST JEWELS.

Women Who Walk the City Streets Wearing White Shrouds.

THE MOSQUE SIDI ABD-EL-RHAMAN

(FROM OUR TRAVELING COMMISSIONER.) ALGIERS, March 11.-The native Arabs of Algiers are by no means the wierd, uncouth and ferocious Arabs of the desert. They are as a body as different in appearance, dress, customs, and what may be at least called an Oriental refinement, as are the splendidly-formed, intellectual and cuttivated people of our American cities different from the roughest cowboys of the plains, or the "poor whites" of the mountain regions of the South. Their manner is at all times of the most polished dignity and nustere gravity. This is perhaps more true more glimpses of Arab women of the finer of Arab men than Arab women; and it is type than offered by all other possible oppossible that his interesting costume adds much to his impressiveness in this regard. The city Arab, or Moor, as he is often termed, of good circumstances, is always a well-dressed man and is invariably one of the cleanest beings on earth. I do not know inst how many "doors of heaven are opened" for cleanliness by Islam; but the Koran makes it a part of, rather than "next to," godliness. The city Arab pure and simple, as well as the Algerian Moor, who, for distinction, should be fixed in the mind as the Arab who has intermarried with other, chiefly Oriental, races, alike wear richly embroidered waistcoats, with bright-colored and often jeweled sashes, baggy, zonave-like white trousers, which stop short just below the knees, exposing bare, brown legs to the feet. The feet are encased in slippers or sandals, which can be removed instantly. Some, like the Algerian Jews, wear the richest of silk stockings.

AN ARABIAN DUDE. The outer garment is the white burnous, a wrap often of the most delicate woolen texture, frequently seven yards in length, which is gracefully draped from the shoulders, or head and shoulders. With the pure Arab the burnous becomes a part of the headgear, a sort of hood, bound round and round with a silk or hempen cord; but the Moor, who a greater dandy, may always be distinguished by his turban, a piece of spotless muslin wound about a bright red skull cap, called a shashes. Either the Arab or Moor is a ludicrous figure humped on the back of the diminutive donkey, which seems to have reached an extreme of littleness in Algiers, for here it is scarcely larger than a healthy goat. But astride his white or, dappled, Arab horse-although the idea of the "Arab steed" being a wonderful animal is all a mistake, as it simply possesses the hardy and lively qualities of a spirited mustang—or striding with measured tread and flowing robes along these quaint old streets, or still standing against some Moresque gateway, he is always a majestic and impressive figure.

The Arab woman, save in rare and pleasant exceptions, is hardly what the poets and painters have shown us. It she be graceful or beautiful, it is extremely difficult to discover it; and she possesses neither of these attractions after she is 25, for she is a "wite" at from 12 to 14 years of age, whatever that station or condition means among the Arabs. All there is about this being to become ecstatic over is that subtle prompting of the poetic tancy which ever, to the male mind peculiarly, blooms like the rose in any soil of apparent coyishness and mystery in the centler sex. NOT A WOMAN'S RIGHTER

The Arab woman is simply a vacuous, insensute voiceless and dreamless human aniwhile upon the subject the thought involstate of wonder and resentment that Oriental ent and laden often with jewels which woman is satisfied with her condition of would purchase a king's ransom. nenentity. Missionary zeal, which insists | her "rights," endlessly resents, opposes and asserts in defense of her personal importance, however little the same may be questioned. The head, hands, knees and feet—touch the however little the same may be questioned. The dress of this Arab woman is all-concealing upon the street, and all-revealing in her home. The outer garment is the haik, white, usually of wool, sometimes of silk often of cotton. It is frequently 20 feet in length and nearly two yards wide. Reneath this are precisely four articles of apparel, a gauge chemise, an unstiffened corset or bodice, frequently massively embroidered and bejeweled, pantaloons reaching to the

GRASTLY FIGURES.

Most women not satisfied with this retiremost women whose husbands are not satisfied by bringing the haik down over one side of the forehead so that but one eye, a dark, eyebrow and a tiny patch of the forehead are visible. Their feet are usually encased in brown or yellow slippers; danglets and banglets of indescribable jewelry tinkle and chime from waists, ankles and concealed mincing steps, those who are allowed upon the streets at all, wriggle, glide and scurry along, like a bevy of escaped wraiths from among the as silent graves upon the heights. But this privilege of waddling about like a lot of sheeted spooks is by no means an universal one. The young and fair see the sunight only through the open courts of their the exception that on Fridays in company with servants or elders, little excursions are allowed to the suburban marabouts, or sacred temples, and the khoubas at the cemeteries, as at Belcour, where they are allowed the cheering diversion of filling with water the little cups resting at the heads of tombs: for the birds drink from these and fly to heaven with greetings from the souls at rest

Indoors the dress of these women is ethereal enough for the most fervid artist's fancy. lungs and throat which usually attend it, They never see in their own homes any male but their husbands and children. The climate, like that of Cuba in winter, and exorders and throat affections. cessively hot from May until October, has also much to do with this.

A WEAKNESS FOR JEWELRY. Wives of the wealthier Arabs will don pink, yellow or blue gauze silk hose and dainty yellow babouches, or slippers. Their hair will be coiled in a simple Grecian knot and fastened with some huge jeweled orna-ment, and perhaps a tiny skull cap, richly idered, will rest coquettishly on one side of the head. But all are bedecked with jewelry. The poorer are fond of burnished copper bands about the arms, wrists and ankles, or brilliant quartz and glass cubes and crystals, strung on pack thread, encircle their necks. The rich are ablaze with jewels, principally pearls, emeralds and sapphires, | Page 8 of this issue.

badly set but always genuine and of great value. There is a legend in Algiers that the hidden riches of the wealthier Arabs, principally comprising jewels, exceeds the sum total in value of all coin, plate and ewels otherwise possessed by all nationalities in the "white city."

Of the more than 100 mosques which for Of the more than 100 mosques which for-merly existed in the city of Algiers, only five now remain. The most interesting of these are Djamaa el-Kebir, the Grand Mosque, in Rue de la Marine, Djamaa el-Djedid, or the Fisher-place Mosque, also in the Rue de la Marine, and the enchanting little mosque of Djamaa Sidi Rhaman, overlooking the garden of Marengo, and taking its name from the marabout, or Mohammedan priest of most venerated memory, Sidi Abd-el-Rhaman, who died in 1471 and is interred here within an inner sacred chapel or khouba, surrounded by several Pachas

MEETING ON COMMON GROUND. Two distinct and zealous sects, the Maleki rite, and the Hanefi rite, worship respectively at the Grand Mosque and the Fisher-place Mosque; while at the Sidi Mosque all are on common ground; it is the shrine of the more aristocratic Moslems; and on cer-tain days of the week it is thronged with men and women, the latter, from an old and lax custom, predominating. Indeed it is at this little mosque, it reverence is assumed and discretion exercised that one will secure portunities in Algiers.

The Fisher-place Mosque is one of the most striking buildings in Algiers, as you approach the city from the Mediterranean. It has a lofty central dome, a similar dome at each of the four corners, and, at the northwest side a lofty and craceful minaret. It is whitewashed to a dazzting whiteness, and looms high and solemn over all other structures in this quarter, where the line between old and new Algiers is so closely defined. Near it is the Pecherie or fish market, from whence the mosque derives its name, and at all times of day and night one will come up-on the swarthy toilers of the sea, a wild and halt naked set of splendid fellows, who in weird looks and strange customs are the almost exact prototypes of the Oriental pesca-dores who will be found around the old cathedral square and the crumbling Bouquete walls opposite Moro's frowning parapets at Havana. The severity of the interior of this mosque is even more marked than that of the Grand Mosque in the Rue de la Marine. The columns are draped with matting; the floors are protected by matting; and the gallery of open woodwork is covered with a somber coat of paint. All the windows are tiny and high. The devotion of its worshipers and the solemnity and quiet of the place are something worthy of Christian people's attention. A COURT OF JUSTICE. At the left of this mosque, if the visitor will ascend the steps and enter a little door always standing open in the daytime, there will be found a curious court attachment. Nearly a half dozen turbaned Arabs are seated cross-legged upon a rug of matting. They are silent, grave, mysterious. About them are scattered a score of huge open books, the black characters of which show them to be tomes of record. This is a lower Arab court of justice. All minor disputes are settled here, and judgments are recorded by a cadi's secretary in the huge volumes upon the floor. No woman is permitted to come into the presence of this august tribunal. She is penned within an adjoining algists, blue some and single her testiing cloister-like room, and gives her testi-mony through a hole in the intervening wall not as large as her own head.

The lovely though diminutive mosque of Sidi Abd-el-Rhaman sets above the garden of Marengo and overlooks the sea. Its sursoundings are charming, and within its littie cemetery are eucalyptus, mulberry and fig trees shading the quaint old tombs. The inner chapel is a sort of shrine, from being the burial place of numbers of Moslem saints, Pachas and Deys, and a wondrous number of sacred rites, emblems and carvings, with lamps, ostrich eggs, embroideries, grotesquely decorate the columns, walls and hang from the ceilings. More than a million francs have been expended on such gifts and tokens.

BEAUTY AT HER DEVOTIONS. It is in this little mosque that one will mal, sheeted like the dead, in the streets, see so many Arab women. Their glittering and dead to the world when within the four silken halks hide their faces, but there is a windowless walls where the majestic being constant atmosphere of perfume, an endless who owns her keeps her penned. You can | tinkle of concealed and half-concealed make nothing more or less of her. And jewelry, a continuous murmur of musical voices in prayer, and a ceaseless rustle of untarily comes that the relation of woman women's attire as they come, go, or prostrate to society in this Oriental existence affords a themselves in their devotions. THROUGH THE CANON. ngineer Stanton Describes His Perlies Passage Over 520 Ranids-Thrown Into a Whirlpool-A Railroad Surveyed Through the

Grand Canen. DENVER, March 28.-Chief Engineer Robert B. Stanton, who left here with a CONTRACTOR FISHEL'S STORY. corps last November to make a preliminary survey for the Denver, Colorado Canon and Pacific Railway from Grand Junction to the Gulf of California, through the Grand Canon of the Colorado river, has returned home from The Needles, Cal., for a couple of weeks to rest. Mr. Stanton and his party are the first men who passed through this dangerous canon since Major Powell made

In conversation to-night he said the con-struction of the railroad through the canon was perfectly feasible, and that from Grand Junction, Col., to The Needles, a distance of 900 miles, the grade need not at any place exceed 20 feet per mile, and for the greater part the grade will be 5 to 10 feet per mile, while the curvature, contrary to g expectation, he believes will be light.

Mr. Stanton has gathered considerable data upon the resources of the country ad jacent to the canon, but as yet the greater part is undeveloped and it will be a difficult matter to put them into any definite shape. Between the head of Colorado river and the end of the Grand Canon he passed over 520 rapids. He graphically describes one of the most beautiful sections of Oak-land. his passage over rapid No.

465 below Peach Springs, during which one of his boats was damaged by a collision with the rocks, and he was washed overboard by a wave, thrown into a whirl-pool sucker, and drawn downward into what seemed to be a bottomless river. He finally came to the surface 50 feet from where he went down, and was rescued by his men. These rapids are many times more dangerous than the one where President Brown and two men lost their lives last summer, but on account of the present party being supplied with life preservers, no man dur-ing the whole trip has been in danger of drowning. He considers this canon, from Peach Springs to the Grand Wash, to be the grandest and most wonder ul of the whole canon, the scenery surpassing anything in America, even the Grand Canon of Arkansas and the Black Canon of Gun-

An English Syndicate Makes Some Big Purchases in California. SAN FRANCISCO, March 28 .- Negotiations which have been pending for the past year looking to the sale of certain local breweries to an English syndicate are practically complete. The sale of the United States Brewery was consummated yesterday when part of the purchase money was paid. The full purchase price is understood to be in the neighborhood of $450,000.

The Philadelphia brewery is contracted to be sold to Mr. Lennon, as representative of the syndicate, on the first day of August next, the price named being $2,650,000, Lennon agreeing to pay $1,650,000 on that date, and $1,000,000 in bonds representing a blanket mortgage on the establishment.

endville's Board of Trade Disagrees With Smelters About the Tariff on Lead. LEADVILLE, March 28 .- The Board of Trade has adopted resolutions declaring that the resolutions recently adopted by the smelter proprietors to the effect there is a scarcity of lead ores mined in Leadville to meet smelting requirements, is without foundation, and their statement that the cost of smelting is gradually increasing from year to year is not according to facts. The resolutions further declare the mining industry of the West can be best pre-served by the imposition of a tariff on all silver lead ores, as proposed by the Com-mittee on Ways and Means, and that without such tariff many of the mines will be compelled to close down.

"My throat became raw and was all choked up. I was constantly hawking and raising. A dry, hacking cough set in. The trouble hung on this way for some time, when I contracted fresh cold, and from that on grew rapidly worse. Sharp pains would shoot through my chest, extending as far as the shoulder blades. Palpitation of the heart set in. This would be followed by a slow, irregular beating and a feeling of dizziness. My nights became restless. My throat would fill up and my breathing was labored and difficult. I would arise in the morning more tired than when I went to bed. I had no appetite, and had a nanseating sensation in my stomach after eating. There was a heaving feeling in my chest as of a weight pressing down. My stomach became so tender and sore that at times I was unable to bear even the weight of my clothes. I became weaker every day. I was reduced in weight from 168 to 128 pounds; in fact, I was more like a dead man than a living one.

in fact, I was more like a dead man than a living one.

"I tried various remedies, but obtained no relief. I had read often of the success Drs. Copeland & Blair were having with cases similar to mine, so determined to try them. I found their charges lower even than patent medicines, and placed myself under their care. Words cannot express my cratitude for them. I am to-day well and hearty. I gained 20 pounds in weight, have a good appetite and sleep well. To be brief, all the symptoms I have mentioned have disappeared, and I am satisfied that Drs. Copeland & Blair have entirely cured me of my trouble."

Mr. Fishel can be addressed at his residence, 217 Coltart square, and this interview readily verified.

HOME TREATMENT. Jacob Altmeyer, of Risher, opposite McKees-Jacob Altmeyer, of RISBE, opposite DALECTORY port, Pa., states: "I commenced treatment for my catarrhal trouble with Drs. Copeiand & Blair on June 29, 1888. I now feel like a different man, and shall be pleased to state my case and recommend their treatment to anyone addressing me."
Mr. William Barnes, of Hickman, Pa., was amioted with catarra, and had lost all sense of taste and smell. He was under the care of Drs. Copeland & Blair, and now states: "I am perfectly well, and owe my recovery to their treatment."

Mr. Harry Phillips, of Hulton, Pa., has this to say of his successful treatment for catarrh to say of his successful treatment for catarrh with Drs. Copeland & Blair: "I was in very bad shape, but now feel like a different being, and as well as I ever did in my life,"
